MANAGEMENT REVIEW PLANNERS

I am writing against the banning of any more areas, in our state, pertaining the oceans, or shoreline. We have enough sanctuaries, restrictions and laws and rules and regulations to control everything.

Anything more would lead to misunderstanding, and abuse and also too much areas to be properly and effectively maintained and enforced.

Instead some certain laws on endangered species should be studied, because their effectiveness has resulted in being too good for their health and welfare. Their increasing numbers has become a health hazard unto themselves.

The Humpback whale population is coming to the point where their feeding in the North has changed the balance of nature. They are depleting their major source of food, the krill. They will grow to smaller and skinnier size, more susceptible to disease and infighting. The bull whales will kill baby male whales to Avoid future competition. Maybe they are doing it already. Mystery small whale deaths,

The green sea turtles are cleaning up the reefs of lime and algae. The major reef fish diet. Less reef fishes, less bigger predatory fishes. You know up and down the food chain. When there is too much of one species in a crowded condition ~~if~~ they turn for the worse on one another. Like the "Fibrosis Dirofilaria" that are affecting the turtles, eyes, mouth, flippers etc a major life sustaining part of the body. Like too many chickens in one coop.

Like on land, too many Egrets and Tilapias. They are eating up the smaller creatures and fish. No grasshoppers, crickets, toads, frogs and crayfishes. Egrets also hazards at airports.

In the western states the reintroduction of the "grey wolves", which was a good idea, by your comrades, to begin with, now is a problem, because they have increased to the point where cattle and wild game like ELK, Deer and Bisons are fair game.

What I'm getting at is restrictions and laws are good only to a certain point. Not forever.

Don't close any more oceans or Shoreline access. Many of us look forward to a secluded or popular place to enjoy and unwind. Our senior citizens look forward to a day of fishing to meet other friends. They stay civile, healthier, and more sane because they get to socialize.
It's the reason to wake up tomorrow.

Call anyone of you who are in favor
creating more sanctuaries and restrictions and banning laws go shopping browse around in a store three or four hours
or more, buy nothing and go home happy
